Me 2.0: Build a Powerful Brand to Achieve Career Success

Yankee IABC is pleased to welcome Dan Schawbel, the leading personal branding expert for Gen-Y and best selling author of "Me 2.0: Build a Powerful Brand to Achieve Career Success." Dan will host a special breakfast session in which he will provide valuable information on how to leverage social media for personal branding and career success.

A highly successful speaker, author, and professional communicator, Dan will share with attendees his proven four-step process for building a powerful personal brand. His tips on using social media tools for personal empowerment, confidence building, and professional networking as well as his advice on how to create both an online and offline presence for career protection and self-promotion have been well received by a variety of Fortune 500 companies, including Time Warner and CitiFinancial, as well as numerous colleges and universities, including Harvard and MIT.

Dan will draw on his corporate and personal experience, his interviews with many successful business people and celebrities, and his extensive review of reports and case studies to help you thrive in the digital age.

Dan Schawbel is the founder of Millennial Branding, LLC, and a former Fortune 200 communicator (Social Media Specialist at EMC). Dan created the Personal Branding Blog®, which was the #1 job blog by Careerbuilder in 2008, is an AdAge top 50 marketing blogger and is syndicated by Reuters, Forbes, Fox Business and other major networks. Dan is also the publisher of Personal Branding Magazine®, head judge for the Personal Brand Awards® and director of Personal Branding TV®. Dan is Business Week’s youngest columnist, and he was named by that publication as one of 20 people entrepreneurs should follow on Twitter. He is also a featured contributor to Mashable, LifeHack, and MediaPost and he has written articles for BrandWeek Magazine and Advertising Age.

Interview with Dan Schawbel  By Jennifer Scupi

Dan Schawbel wants to help you upgrade your personal brand. Author of the bestselling career book Me 2.0: Build a Powerful Brand to Achieve Career Success (Kaplan, 2009), Schawbel is widely considered the leading personal branding expert for Gen-Y. Upon release in 2009, Me 2.0 vaulted into the Amazon top 100 business book bestsellers list and was the number one job-hunting book. Schawbel is Business Week’s youngest columnist and also writes for websites such as Mashable, LifeHack, and MediaPost. In advance of his speaking appearance at the IABC’s upcoming meeting on April 14 at the Waltham Westin Hotel, he took time out to answer some questions.

You’re a personal branding expert for Gen-Y. What is your advice for them and how would it differ for a Gen-Xer or Baby Boomer?

The advice I give is the same for each generation. I believe it’s not about your age anymore, but your unique promise of value, your visibility, and what you stand for (your message). The first thing you need to do is discover your brand and focus it on one particular niche, so that you can stand out in the crowded marketplace. The second thing you need to do is to reserve all your online properties that surround your niche, such as having your own domain name, your name on social networks, and a blog. The third thing you need to do is to establish a system, where you’re subscribing to relevant blogs and media sources, organizing the most important articles, and sharing them on your blog and social streams.

If people have thirty minutes a day or some time just once a week to spend on promoting themselves, what should they do? What would have the most impact?

You get out what you put into promoting yourself. Also, you should put high-quality content online so that other people promote you. What other people say about your brand is more impactful than any self-promotional activity. Think about it; if you proclaim yourself a guru, how far will that really go? But if the New York Times says it, won’t it mean that much more? Third party sources, and press for that matter, are extremely important for brand building. If you only have thirty minutes to promote your ideas, then you won’t get that much from it. The competition on the web demands that you put more time in. The bare minimum you should have is a blog where you can contribute a few posts per week. This way, you can capture your ideas and refer people to them.

What pitfalls should people avoid when establishing their personal brand?

Do not over promote yourself or it will turn people away. Keep a balanced ratio of eight pieces of value contribution to one to two pieces of self-promotional material. For instance, you can refer people to interesting articles, share your opinion on a relevant issue, and then promote a blog post or an achievement you’ve had. You have to earn the right to promote yourself online, by promoting other people’s work first and sharing insightful ideas and opinions.

Do not start communicating using social networks without having a distinct brand. If I go to your blog and it has the same design, name, and positioning as other blogs, I won’t even bother to read it. You need to really know what you want to do, what your destination is, and what you want to be known as before you start communicating a distorted and unoriginal message.

President's Corner: Seven Quick Takes on “Connections”

By Lauren Libitz, President, YIABC

When I started my year as President, I wanted to focus the board on “content, credibility and connections.” In this issue I want to focus on seven ways you can build connections through Yankee IABC.

1. We are an entirely volunteer organization so everyone on the board is balancing IABC volunteerism with work, family and other priorities. We rely on you to support our efforts. If you have a great idea for the Chapter, why not volunteer to lead the way? Your passion and enthusiasm is what will keep the chapter thriving in years to come. The only way we can grow is to get more people involved.

2. This time of year means we need to start thinking about next year’s Board of Directors. Our President will be Jake George, as he was voted President-Elect last year and I’ll obviously become the Past-President, but there are lots of other open opportunities. The full list of roles is available in our Board Member Directory on YankeeIABC.org. Courtney English, our current VP of Administration will soon be leading the charge on our elections. If you are interested in any of the roles, or in being part of the Nomination Committee to help find possible board member volunteers, please contact her.

3. I know that getting involved can seem daunting, but the more you get involved the more you’ll get out of the organization. There are lots of small ways to get started: we always need writers for EDIT, people to keep discussions going in LinkedIn, a volunteer for Facebook (see item seven below), more people to help with our Twitter account (see item six below), people to help with event set-up, follow-up and more. Contact Pat Masterson for more info.

4. Earlier this month we took a different approach to our usual spring “networking” event. Yankee IABC board members held smaller lunch and dinner gatherings at restaurants all over Massachusetts to coincide with Boston’s Restaurant Week. The feedback I heard was extremely positive. Attendees felt it was a great way to get to know and network with other communicators in a smaller setting. It also reminded me that the true value of IABC is the connections you make, especially locally.

5. Speaking of locally connecting, one way is to attend an in-person event. Another is to take advantage of Yankee IABC’s social media presence. Our LinkedIn group is thriving and is a fabulous way to connect with other local members, find/post jobs, and get feedback on any communications topic you can think of. I know some of you aren’t close enough geographically to attend our events in person, but this offers a great way to stay virtually connected and leverage the power of our local network.

6. I am thrilled about our new Twitter account. I am a Twitter fan (follow me: http://twitter.com/llibitz) and have been for the past year. It is one of my favorite ways to stay in touch with people who have similar interests, and stay on top of trends and news. Our new IABC Yankee account ties into our LinkedIn group and is just one more way for us to keep you informed about our activities and for you to share feedback, ideas, and news with us. Follow us and we’ll follow you: http://twitter.com/IABCYankee

7. A couple of years ago when I originally signed up for Facebook it was just to connect with family and catch up with friends I hadn’t seen in years. But now I use it to learn more about work colleagues, IABC board members, and many others outside my personal circle. Yankee IABC also has a group in Facebook, but we don’t have anyone designated to actively manage it right now. If you are FB savvy and would like to help build the Chapter’s Facebook presence, please contact us. It’s a great way to get involved on a small scale!

Upcoming Events

April 13: Yankee IABC Chapter Meeting. Me 2.0: Build a Powerful Brand to Achieve Career Success. Waltham, MA. Get more information or register.
